

When it rains, it pours!

Numismagram Newsletter #18 (III/2019)

February, the shortest month, is now in the rearview mirror, and this was an even shorter February than normal for us here at Numismagram. Not even halfway through the month, we came home to discover a strange noise coming from the apartment above us. Minutes later, the source of the noise--or at least, one of the results--began to present itself in the form of water dripping from our ceiling fixtures...

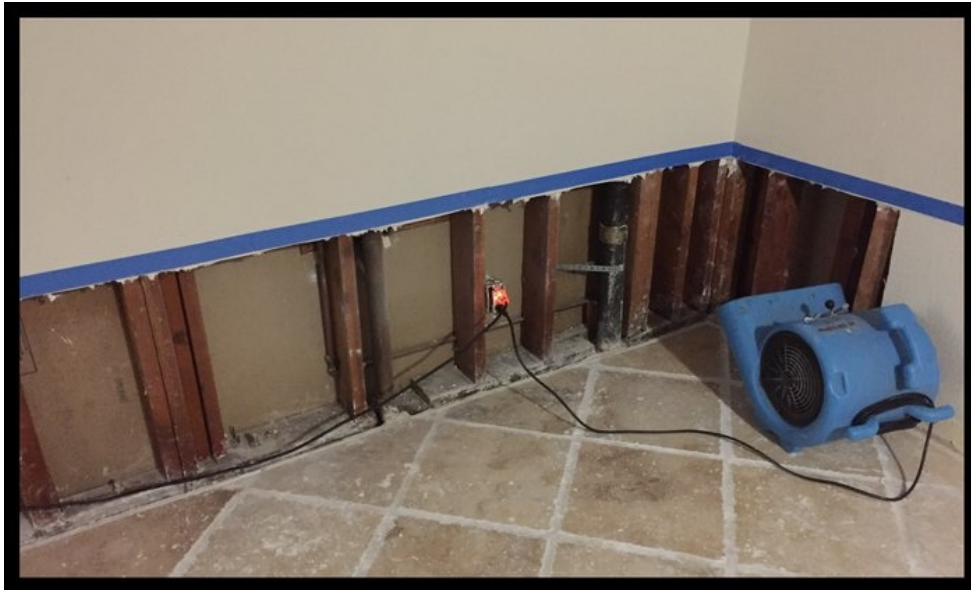

Obviously, this is never a good sign, and we rushed upstairs to investigate. The short version is that an unlicensed "plumber" was hired to work on a bathroom and failed to turn off the water supply. When his clamp failed, water started to pool, and when you're below said pool, it will eventually start to rain. Though the water was finally shut off some 30 minutes later, we obviously suffered a good deal of damage to our ceilings, walls, and floors--much of which is now in the process of drying out before being replaced...

What initially seemed like a 7-10 day displacement will actually be much longer, and the rest of the month has seen us dealing with an impromptu move, scrambling to catch up on our jobs, and the everlasting joy which comes with corralling everyone's insurances. Oh, and a week without internet—one of life's greatest setbacks. Nevertheless, we have still been able to bring you a fresh group of new material for March.

No, that's not from our inventory, but these industrial strength dryers are instrumental in reversing the water damage which we suffered, and given how many there are and how long they have been running, one wonders just how much energy they have been consuming. It's probably not as much as this turbo generator could produce, but I also wouldn't be entirely surprised...

Our new, temporary place is also a bit further out of town, so it has necessitated some more daily driving. Fortunately, our vehicle is fairly fuel efficient, but the extra mileage in Silicon Valley traffic is never welcome. However, it might be easier doing this driving in style, like maybe in a vintage, 1920's-era set of wheels like this one...

These are just a few of the stellar pieces in our new upload. Check out everything for another automotive-related medal, another exceptional architectural type, a John Lennon tribute medal, some attractive decorations, an Admiral Vernon piece, and an array of interesting plaques, among other things...
